Brandywine Workshop and Archives (BWA) is a non-profit, diversity-driven visual arts institution founded in 1972 to promote the fine art of printmaking and support the development of arts students, young emerging artists, and honor older, established artists primarily of color through printmaking residencies, exhibitions, educational programming and documentation.

The organization today has 17 satellite collections of its visiting artist prints in major art museums, universities, and heritage centers across the country and operates the Artura.org, a free online database that includes its image library and archival materials from the last five decades. BWA has traveled exhibitions across the United States and to more than 30 cities abroad, while planning and hosting international artists through cultural exchange programs and Visiting Artist residencies. It has a highly professional support staff and is seeking a leader to replace the retiring Executive Director.
